On Sunday June 1, activists demonstrated outside the home of UC Berkeley vivisectioner,

A dozen activists again demonstrated outside the home of UC Berkeley non-human primate torturer who inflicts hideous violence on macaque monkeys in his laboratory.

We are demanding an end to [redacted]s vicious experiments, and an end to primate vivisection at UC Berkeley. We are calling on UC Berkeley to finally be responsive to the residents of Berkeley and the student population. The Berkeley city council, as well as the ASUC, have both passed resolutions condemning primate vivisection, and calling for a decrease in the number of animals exploited at the university. The university continues to experiment on primates, and is currently constructing the Li Ka-Shing Center for Biomedical and Health Sciences, which will lead to a seventy percent expansion of UCB's Northwest Animal Facility

[redacted] wasn't home, but we marched through his neighborhood flying neighbors with a banner reading "primates" and left the street and sidewalk in front of his house covered in chalked slogans.

[redacted] you can stop experimenting on animals at any time. All your neighbors think you're sick. Your experiments conducted for years have not saved a single human life, they've only kept the grant money rolling. Quit torturing animals and the public campaign against you ends. Otherwise activists will be back again and again.
