FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

35. Plaintiffs reallege and incorporate the allegations of paragraphs 1 through 34 above, as if fully set forth herein.

36. Bruce Perens ("Perens") is an Individual who resides at 1563 Solano Ave., Berkley, CA, 94707. Bruce Perens is one of the principal leaders of the Open Source Movement and the Linux Operating System Movement. Perens make these claims in public speaking engagements and through books, press interviews, Internet news articles, and is regarded by many as the “Colonel” of Linux. Bruce Perens articles and interviews are distributed widely across the Internet and the world, and are read widely by hundreds of millions of people. Bruce Perens also serves on the Board of Directors of a group called OSRM – the Open Source Risk Management Group, and business entity that sells patent infringement insurance to commercial Linux customers.

37. The Linux Community (“Linux”) is a globally distributed community of independent computer programmers who develop the Linux Operating System over the public Internet and comprises members of countries around the world. The Linux Operating System is controlled under a public license called the GNU Public License or GPL (“GPL”).

38. The Open Source Movement (“OSS”) is a globally distributed community of independent individuals who promote development of open source computer technology under the GPL. The OSS also includes the majority of the members of the Linux Community.

39. Among other things, the OSS advocates that all computer technology should be free, and should be accessible to all people around the world at no charge and no cost.

40. Among other things, the OSS advocates the dismantling of all intellectual property laws that restrict the trade in free software, including the overthrow of the US patent system, intellectual property laws, and the overthrow of the European Union attempts to create a patent system to protect the intellectual property rights of individuals, and computer technology companies.

41. Members of OSS and Linux routinely reverse engineer, misappropriate, or by other means incorporate patented software methods, trade secrets, and other protected intellectual property into their projects under the cause of freedom to innovate, and in support of their socialist views that software should be free and owned by the masses. These activities have resulted in lawsuits and litigation from large computer companies around the world in an attempt to protect their investments in development of computer technology as the result of wide-spread theft of intellectual property by members of OSS and Linux.

42. Much of the activities of Linux and OSS have served to create a funneling system allowing sensitive and advanced technology created by computer technology companies in the United States to be illegally exported out of the United States and into the hands of the citizens of other countries.

43. As a result of these activities, a large portion of US technology has been unwittingly placed into the hands of various groups around the world, including Al-Queda, and other groups who sponsor international terrorism.

44. As a result of these activities, a large portion of US technology has been unwittingly placed into the hands of various groups around the world, including radical governments and groups who sponsor and have used the technology in support of the creation of weapons of mass murder and mass destruction designed to murder American Citizens and their families.

45. As a result of these activities, a large portion of US technology has been unwittingly placed into the hands of various groups around the world, and has crippled and destroyed the commercial computer software technology markets in the United States by destroying their ability to charge money for their technology and has harmed the cause of commerce within the United States.

46. The beheading and murder of United States Citizens in Iraq, Saudi Arabia, and other countries have been videotaped, converted to MPEG and other images for viewing on the public Internet through the use of OSS and Linux software and computer technology developed and purloined by Linux and OSS members and illegally exported from the United States.

47. Companies which sponsor, endorse, and support OSS and Linux, and those acting in concert as their advocates have been unwitting participants in wholesale technology theft of United States developed technology and sponsors of domestic and international terrorism.

48. Companies which sponsor, endorse, and support OSS and Linux, and those acting in concert as their advocates have been unwitting participants in wholesale technology theft of United States developed technology and sponsors of efforts to undermine the Government of the United States and the economic stability of computer technology development and industry within the United States.

49. Companies which sponsor, endorse, and support OSS and Linux, and those acting in concert as their advocates have been unwitting participants in wholesale technology theft of United States developed technology and sponsors of the creation of weapons of mass murder and mass destruction by the enemies of the United States.

49. Companies who attempt to protect their rights to their intellectual property by filing lawsuits against members of Linux and OSS are attacked publicly on the public Internet through a variety of means, including identity theft, defamation, interference in their business and cultural relationships, violation of their rights of expressive association and freedom of speech, threats to murder them, intentional infliction of emotional distress to the extent they take their own lives, and Internet postings advocating they commit suicide.

50. Many of these methods employed by OSS and Linux Community members to oppress and suppress public viewpoints they do not agree with, do not differ in any way and in many cases resemble the same methods employed by international terrorists to promote their causes, in that they advocate through the posting of messages, emails, and public statements to Internet websites: murder, violence, death, oppression, mob mentality, intentional infliction of emotional distress, terror, defamation, identify theft, character assassination, threats to murder or firebomb the homes of individuals, and threats to overthrow governmental systems.

51. Although OSS and Linux both state goals and ideals which are attractive, such as freedom to innovate, freedom to develop new technology, and free access to software and computer technology, efforts by competing open source efforts to develop or create new development communities are routinely attacked publicly by OSS and Linux members through a variety of oppressive means over the public Internet, such as threats of: murder, violence, death, oppression, mob mentality, intentional infliction of emotional distress, terror, defamation, identify theft, character assassination, threats to murder or firebomb the homes of individuals, and threats to overthrow governmental systems.

52. Many of these activities fall within the definitions under the Patriot Act and other Federal Legislation designed to protect the American People as acts of domestic terrorism.

53. The Santa Cruz Operation ("SCO") recently filed lawsuits in State and Federal Court attempting to protect their intellectual property rights against Linux and OSS and subsequently alleged that IBM and other companies had participated in a scheme to steal it's intellectual property and place it into the OSS and Linux movements.

54. As a result of these filings, Perens, the leader of Linux and OSS, and members of OSRM Pamela Jones and other members of OSS and Linux erected websites and the public Internet in an attempt to undermine SCO's lawsuits and claims through a variety of oppressive means over the public Internet, such as threats of: murder, violence, death, oppression, mob mentality, intentional infliction of emotional distress, terror, defamation, identify theft, character assassination, tortious interference, negligent misrepresentation, threats to murder or firebomb the homes of individuals, and threats to overthrow governmental systems.

55. Not content to merely focus on the facts and claims of SCO and others brought in Federal and State Courts, the named defendants also participated in efforts to publicly attack not only SCO, but anyone in their view was considered an enemy of their viewpoints and goals for OSS and Linux.

56. Almost all of the companies, groups, and individuals attacked on the Groklaw websites and by Pamela Jones are members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints ("Mormons"), and against business entities who employee, are funded by, owned by, or operated by Mormons. These websites also attack other groups who support or espouse cherished beliefs or positive views of Native American Society, Culture, and Spirituality.

57. During October of 2004, Mr. Merkey offered to purchase a fork of the Linux kernel from Linux and OSS members for an internal Open Source project whose intent was to support education and development of computer development skills within Native American Communities. Mr. Merkey secured $50,000.00 from private contributors to fund and sponsor this project within the Cherokee Nation.

58. This offer was originally suggested by Alan Cox, a Linux member who proposed to Plaintiff that he might wish to consider offering a buyout of certain Linux copyrights to support this project.

59. OSS and Linux responded in a venomous manner to this proposal and while many members accepted the proposal, Perens, OSRM, and Groklaw and those acting in concert with them opposed it, and used their influence with OSS and Linux members by posting messages through the public Internet to defame and threaten Plaintiff through a variety of means, such as threats of: murder, violence, death, oppression, mob mentality, intentional infliction of emotional distress, terror, defamation, identify theft, character assassination, tortious interference, negligent misrepresentation, threats to murder or firebomb the homes of individuals, and threats to overthrow governmental systems.

60. Perens posted Internet messages on LWN.net stating to Linux and OSS members that "Merkey works for SCO," and that "Merkey should be placed in a file of people to be killed". Merkey has not or ever worked for SCO or the Canopy Group.

61. Perens made public statements to news reporters, in public speeches, emails, and Internet postings "Merkey works for SCO" and "Merkey works for the Canopy Group". Merkey has not or ever worked for SCO or the Canopy Group.

62. Perens made public statements to Linux and OSS members, news reporters, and in public speeches, "Merkey stole Novell's intellectual property", and that "Merkey contaminated Linux with Novell's Intellectual Property."

63. During the time period these events occurred, Jones and Perens were both employed by or affiliated with OSRM.

64. Jones subsequently obtained a copies of sealed and public Court Documents from sources unknown and posted them on the Groklaw website in a deliberate attempt to defame Merkey by holding him in a "false light" as a liar, thief, and saboteur, as an undercover agent of SCO and the Canopy Group, and as an illegal drug user. The information presented and her statements were intended to create a misleading belief in OSS and Linux that Merkey "worked for Microsoft" and "worked for SCO" and "stole Novell's intellectual property." and falsely portrayed Merkey as a dangerously deranged criminal who used illegal drugs. These messages were a deliberate attempt to create hate, and publicly defame Merkey, invade his privacy, and tortiously interfere with his conduct. Jones also allowed Groklaw members and acted in concert with them to post libelous comments and postings on Groklaw impersonating Merkey and stealing his identity.

65. Jones then modified the content of her website by removing positive comments in support of Merkey and encouraging OSS and Linux members to post negative comments. In removing positive comments, Jones was in effect molding the content and message of the website to portray a message she wished to publish to the world, and subsequently acted as an alter-ego of Groklaw in exercising her right of Expressive Association of her message, and in doing so, became personally liable for the content and messages portrayed by Groklaw in these articles and postings.

66. Numerous other websites took up the call within Linux and OSS, including Merkey.net, Ip-Wars.net, slashdot.org, finchhaven.com, Yahoo.com, Pagan Savage.com, and others under the directives of their leader, Perens, the self appointed "colonel" of Linux and OSS.

67. Finchhaven hosted and published statements that "Merkey recants or does more peyote." and "Merkey works in close comfort with SCO".

68. Merkey.net posted comments stating "merkey is a homophobic nutcase" and comments that Merkey should be killed, murdered, and was a moron, peyote addict, worked for SCO, and language attacking his race and religion. Merkey.net also posted private emails and modified the content of these emails and invaded Merkey's privacy by publishing these emails on the Internet in an attempt to defame him and tortiously interfere with his conduct.

69. Ip-Wars.net posted stories and content stating Merkey worked for SCO and was a peyote user and drug addict, advocating his murder, and attacking his race, religion, and beliefs, and in posting content that invaded his privacy.

70. Pagansavage posted comments Merkey was a "fucktard", "Moron", advocated his murder and death, advocated he take his own life, made threats to murder and rape his wife and children, and even made threats to murder his unborn children in the womb. These statements were vile and outrageous.

Pagan Savage also posted private emails that invaded Merkeys privacy, and modified many of these emails and engaged in identify theft.

71. All of these websites subsequently attached their defamatory content to googles search engines using a computer hacking technique known as "Google spamming" or "google bombing" to manipulate Google's page ranking system that ensured that Internet users searching for content on the name "Jeff Merkey" would display results for these stories and weblogs before any other entry and in affect intercepted searches on Mr. Merkey in order to promote libelous content to the world at large. In manipulating Googles ranking system thorough external "hacking" and using these techniques to associate selected defamatory content with Merkey's name, including the posting of private emails, defendants engaged in identity theft and violated Merkey's first ammendment right of expressive association and rights to privacy.

72. Slashdot posted an article in response to Merkey filing an email complaint with the FBI in Richmond Virginia which alleged Merkey.net was hacking google and making threats to murder him. Slashdot then solicited comments, then posted comments Merkey should be murdered, killed, censored and other threats. These comments and threats remained posted on Slashdot.org for over 6 months. In response to the filing of this litigation, Mr. Jay Seirmarco, VP & General Counsel of VA Software Corporation located at 46939 Bayside Parkway, Fremont, CA 94538 negotiated settlement of the claims filed against this client Slashdot.org, and directed that all libelous, harassing, and threatening postings on Slashdot.org be removed from their site. As such, Slashdot.org has been dismissed from this action without prejudice as all of these statements have been removed and Mr. Seirmarco took significant actions internally to prevent such occurrences in the future.

72. All of these comments and actions by members of OSS and Linux are a direct and proximate result of Perens posting and advocating Merkey's murder by posting statements on the public Internet that Merkey should be "placed in a file of people to be killed", and that he "stole Novell intellectual property" and that he "contaminated Linux within Novell intellectual property."

73. Subsequent to these comments, Perens also asserted his role of the leader of Linux and OSS in stating on public websites and public postings, he was meeting with Kris Magnuson of Novell and was negotiating Merkeys

“contamination of Linux.” In addition to engaging slander of title on Merkey's source projects in Linux, Perens was also engaging in conversion and tortious interference in inserting himself between Merkey and Novell and purporting to deal with business matters relative to Merkey's intellectual property.

74. Merkey contacted Jones at Groklaw via email and requested removal of the content and court pleadings on her website and stated if she did not comply, he would have a Subpoena issued from State Court in Utah to determine where she had obtained copies of sealed court records. In response to this email, Jones responded by email stating she would spoil and destroy emails and other evidence should she be served with a subpoena. She then refused to provide an address of service and evaded attempts to locate her physical address.

75. Merkey then initiated efforts to track down Jones and discover her physical address of service, and discovered a shocking trail of deception, identify theft, and misinformation. Jones left several addresses at the local Utah Courts, and all of them proved to be fraudulent. By way of example, Jones left an address of PO Box 1986 in White Plains, NY which was registered to Ben I. Auerbach in Queens, NY. Based upon the convoluted trail, Jones had clearly engaged in deliberate deception to Courts across the US and providing false and fraudulent information to Court clerks, US Postal Service, and other officers of the Court as to true physical address for which she obtained public pleadings via the US mails.

76. Maureen O'Gara, a highly respected journalist in New York, tracked Jones to her physical address of service and published a news story disclosing the same.

77. To Jones credit, the effort of tracking down the physical address of Jones was considerable and took considerable concerted effort.

Plaintiff's relationship with Novell

78. Merkey was a Chief Scientist of Novell until he resigned from the company in April of 1997.

79. During the final 6 months of his employment at Novell, Merkey was subjected to Sexual Harassment by a Novell Executive which facts are more fully described in Civil Case number 2:98-CV-0311DB which is attached at Exhibit 1 attached to the original complaint.

80. Merkey filed an internal complaint while at Novell with the Novell legal department after these events occurred against the Novell Executives involved in the incident.

81. Merkey was subsequently subjected to retaliation by Novell's management for filing the complaint, and the situation became so untenable, Merkey resigned from the company to pursue other interests.

82. After Merkey resigned, Novell filed a lawsuit in State Court alleging he misappropriated trade secrets, stole source code, and interfered with Novell's business interests in other ways.

83. After almost a year of litigation, multiple hearings, and failed attempts by Novell to produce any evidence Merkey took trade secrets, source code, or used it's intellectual property, with the exception of making claims that slides and public white papers presented at a public conference and distributed at "Brainshare Conference" to Microsoft and other attendees at the conference were trade secrets, and old marketing materials which were inadvertently left in their homes, the State Court issued a preliminary injunction holding that Merkey took trade secrets by using his "work experience" and "negative knowledge" under a controversial legal doctrine called the doctrine of inevitable disclosure.

84. Novell presented in 4 separate hearings each lasting 3-4 days, and at the end of each hearing when their trade secret claims were shown to be baseless, moved for multiple continuances to prolong the State case. At the conclusion of final hearing, the court issued a ruling granting a preliminary injunction. This ruling specifically stated "no Novell source code had been used by defendants."

85. Merkey filed a complaint with the EEOC and UADD alleging the lawsuit and Novell's actions were retaliation for filing sexual harassment charges against Novell's executives. At the time, the individuals directing the lawsuit internally at Novell were the same individuals Merkey had originally filed internal charges against for participating in sexual harassment and retaliation.

86. The EEOC, after 18 months of investigation as prescribed by Federal Law, issued Merkey right to sue Novell in Federal Court.

87. Merkey filed suit in US District Court against Novell, and the executives involved in the trade secret litigation alleging sexual harassment, retaliation, and violation of his civil rights in bring a frivolous trade secret case to harrass him and destroy his career, reputation, and business. Within 1 week of the suit being filed and served, Novell proposed settlement of both suits and submitted a proposed settlement to both litigations.

88. All of the executives involved with the exception of Eric Schmidt resigned and left the company under mysterious circumstances. Based upon their rapid and sudden departures, the only logical conclusion is that they were fired by Novell's Board of Directors and Eric Schmidt. Eric Schmidt also was reported to have been fired by Novell's Board of Directors on several news sites, for, among other things, viewing Internet pornography with Novell equipment and Novell facilities.

89. Novell proposed in the settlement agreement attached at Exhibit 2 to the original complaint and placed under seal by the Court: a total release of past, present and future claims, patent cross license, and the right to use Novell's entire arsenal of trade secrets retained by Merkey in "intangible form."

90. The settlement agreement allowed future litigation and reasonable disclosure of it's terms in Federal Court proceedings by stating in Section 3, "It shall not be a violation of this Settlement agreement to refer members of the press or public ... to public records on file at the state and federal courthouse ...".

91. The agreement stated, " The parties [Novell] in the Sexual Harassment and Trade Secret Litigation desire to compromise and settle the Sexual Harassment Litigation without further litigation..."

92. The agreement stated " ... Merkey is released from all past, present, and future claims whether known or unknown, and all obligations, agreements, and liability....." This release functioned as a patent cross license and covenant not to sue, and released and transferred all trade secrets, knowledge, skill, and any other non-tangible intellectual property possessed by Merkey by removing his obligations to maintain the information in confidence as required under the Uniform Trade Secret Act adopted by the State of Utah.

93. Novell further stated in the permanent injunction which was a part of the settlement agreement, Merkey was not allowed to posses 10 year old source code of NetWare or Wolf Mountain or use it in exchange for the right to use all "intangible" knowledge in his possession, whether considered a Novell trade secret or not. Since there was little value in antiquated and unused source code from Netware products which are no longer in use in Novell's relevant markets, Merkey viewed the permanent injunction as moot, since he had not possessed Novell source code unlawfully, and the State Court had issued a specific finding that "no Novell source was used by Merkey" during or following the trade secret litigation.

94. The affect of this language was to in affect grant to Merkey the unfettered right to use patents, trade secrets, and the sum total of Novell's vast body of intellectual property in any projects he wished and endeavored to create.

95. This agreement nullified the preliminary injunction and represented a 180 degree shift in Novell's position regarding it's professed concerns over protecting its trade secrets. This was particularly true given the fact Novell was facing at the time a multi-billion dollar Sexual Harassment action in Federal Court and possible criminal indictment of it's executives and Board of Directors for their actions in the trade secret litigation in setting up dozens of Novell employees to commit perjury in State Court in a futile attempt to prove it's merit less claims.

96. Subsequent to execution of the Settlement Agreement, Novell employees, acting contrary to Novell's wishes and the wishes of it's management, embarked on a press campaign to convince the industry Merkey had been "silenced", "put in his place", "dealt with", "admitted his wrongdoing". Novell subsequent to receiving emails and complaints from Merkey sent an internal announcement admonishing it's employees and directing them to cease in making any comments publicly regarding Merkey or the litigation. Novell also directed Merkey to keep the terms and his "carte blanche" grant of rights to use Novell's body of intellectual property, patents, trade secrets, and other intellectual property confidential outside of State and Federal legal proceedings for purposes unknown to Plaintiff, but surely known to Novell.

97. The language of the agreement reflects a belief in asking the parties to state publicly "... we are not inclined to speculate at this time about what, if any, business opportunities may evolve between the parties in the future..." that Novell potentially was considering or anticipating future business opportunities between the parties.

98. The settlement agreement between the parties also granted Novell Audit rights into Merkey's development efforts in Section 5. The agreement provide Novell the right to conduct 3 audits over a 2 year period. Novell subsequently audited Merkey twice relative to the terms of this agreement and determined that Merkey neither possessed nor was using any Novell Source code.

99. Based on these facts, Perens in making statements Merkey had "Walked out of Novell with Source Code" and that Merkey had "contaminated Linux with Novell's IP" and that Merkey's work "contained Novell's IP" are libel, defamation, and slander of title, and were made with reckless disregard for the truth.

Perens, subsequent to the filing of this action, negotiated a settlement and issued a public correction of his statements and has withdrawn his false and libelous allegations, and admonished Linux and OSS community members for posting death threats and other language, and as such has been dismissed without prejudice as a defendant in this action. His settlement statement attests to the numerous postings containing violent language by the remaining defendants.

100. Based on these facts, Jones and Groklaw in posting preliminary rulings from the Novell vs. Merkey lawsuit, holding Merkey in a "false light" and misrepresenting the final adjudication of the case, have engaged in libel, defamation, and slander of title relative to Merkey's work in Linux and OSS and other areas of the industry.
